

Advocacy

This factsheet explains what advocacy is, how it can help you and where to access it in Edinburgh.

What is advocacy?

Independent advocacy

Collective advocacy

The Mental Health \(Care and Treatment\) Scotland\) Act 2015

How to get advocacy

Related information

What is advocacy?

Advocacy is a way to help you have more influence and control over your own life. It means support from another person to help you express your views and needs, and stand up for your rights. Someone who helps you in this way is called an 'advocate' or an 'advocacy worker'.

An advocate will work with you on a one-to-one basis. They will listen and discuss options on how they may be able to help. An advocate will not advise you on what to do, but will ensure that you have the information you need to know your rights to make an informed decision. An advocate/advocacy worker is never judgemental and will only act on your behalf if you have given them permission to do so.

Advocacy is not a befriending, mediation or counselling service. Advocates do not provide practical support. Everyone will be treated with respect and with full confidentiality (exceptions to this policy are allowed if the advocates feel that the individual or any other person is at risk of serious harm). Whilst it cannot always guarantee the outcome, it will ensure people are listened to.

Advocates provide support with:

- attending medical appointments or reviews
- speaking to people involved in people's care and treatment
- help to find information about and help to access services
- financial matters
- attending appointments for housing
- helping people know your rights, for example, if you are detained in hospital

Independent advocacy

'Independent advocacy' is "independent" when the organisations only provide advocacy. Independent advocates and advocacy groups do not work for hospitals, social work services or any voluntary organisations that provide social care or support services; this ensures that there is no conflict of interests.

The four main principles of independent advocacy are that it:

- puts the people who use it first
- is accountable
- is as free as it can be from conflicts of interest
- is accessible

Collective advocacy

'Collective advocacy' is about people with similar experiences getting together to try to change things for the better. For example, it can enable people to have an influence on what kinds of services are available. By making use of their shared experiences, they can have a much stronger voice and be more influential than they can alone.

The Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2015

The Act gives people who experience mental health difficulties the right to access independent advocacy services. This applies to both individual and collective advocacy.

How to get advocacy

There are different organisations that can help you find statutory and non-statutory advocacy services in your local area. At the end of this factsheet, you will find a list of organisations that can help get the right type of advocacy to suit your situation and needs.

Related information

This section highlights several services advocacy services in Edinburgh. For more information on what is available in Edinburgh, please go to www.edspace.org.uk.

Advocard is an Edinburgh-wide independent advocacy project for adults who have experience of mental health difficulties.

www.edspace.org.uk/provider/advocard

EARS Advocacy provides trained, independent, professional advocacy workers to those in need.

www.edspace.org.uk/provider/ears-advocacy

Edinburgh Carers Council aims to make sure the views of carers are included at all stages in the development of mental health services. They offer collective advocacy to make sure this is done.

www.edspace.org.uk/provider/edinburgh-carers-council

Edinburgh Rape Crisis Centre offers free and confidential emotional and practical support, information and advocacy to women, all members of the trans community, non-binary people of all ages, and young people aged 12-18 in Edinburgh, East and Midlothian, who have experienced sexual violence at any time in their lives.

www.edspace.org.uk/provider/edinburgh-rape-crisis-centre

In Care Survivors Service Scotland (ICSSS) offers counselling, advocacy, befriending, group support and access to records for survivors who have been subjected to neglect, physical, emotional and sexual abuse whilst in care.

www.edspace.org.uk/provider/in-care-survivors-service-scotland

Kindred Scotland provides advocacy and information on services available to children with complex needs and their carers.

www.edspace.org.uk/provider/kindred

Partners in Advocacy provides a range of free and independent advocacy services – including advocacy services for children and young people.

www.edspace.org.uk/provider/partners-in-advocacy

Patients Council at the Royal Edinburgh Hospital promotes the human rights of patients and encourage the improvements and developments in mental health services that patients would like to see.

www.edspace.org.uk/service/patients-council-at-the-royal-edinburgh-hospital/

VOCAL (The Voice Of Carers Across Lothian) provides a range of free and confidential services, including advocacy, to carers living in Edinburgh and Midlothian.

www.edspace.org.uk/provider/vocal

Who Cares? Scotland provides independent advocacy, advice and support services for children and young people in care.

www.edspace.org.uk/provider/who-cares-scotland